How might your conflicts of interest affect me, and how will you address them?

What are your legal obligations to me when acting as my investment advisor? How else does your firm make money and what conflicts of interest do you have? When we act as your investment adviser, we are required by law to put your best interests ahead of our own. This is called our "fiduciary duty." At the same time, the way we make money creates some conflicts with your interests. You should understand and ask us about these conflicts because they can affect the investment advice we provide you. For example, the more assets we manage, the more fees we earn.

How do your financial professionals make money?

Our financial professionals receive fees for the investment advisory services they provide. These fees are ongoing and are based on a percentage of assets in your account. Hourly and fixed rate fees are agreed upon by you and the financial professional and are based on the time and complexity it takes to meet your needs. Certain financial professionals will also receive non-cash compensation, such as technology and research services from investment managers or sponsors. As noted above, our financial professionals have an incentive to have more assets in your account if they are paid by an assetbased fee. If they receive an hourly rate, they have an incentive to bill for more hours of work. Financial professionals who receive non-cash compensation may have an incentive to recommend more of that sponsor or manager's products..
